

I believe cell phone usage should NOT be allowed on airplanes. In addition to the noise level, heated emotions, and distraction of people talking on their phones who would not hear important safety messages, there is still concern about "radiation" delivered from the phone and the electronic signal-does it not interfere with aircraft communications? As an aircraft in an enclosed environment with no option to move away from the people chatting away on their phones, stress levels would be heightened, not to mention the amount of airborne bacteria spread by saliva/breath (droplet contamination.)